TRENDS 2018:

Shaping Workplaces & Spaces

The more you know, the more you can help your business succeed. From a growing millennial workforce to the rise of collaborative spaces and design for productive well-being, these are a few of the trends that are helping to shape office environments and changing the way people work today.

Make Way For Millennials

Millennial employees are often drawn to organizations that offer an engaging atmosphere, comfortably balancing work and life. They want to work in open, creative settings and often feel constrained by what they see as outdated workspaces and traditional practices*.

A millennial-friendly office environment is one that's digital, flexible and inviting. Convenient details like wired workstations and tables, relaxed lounge spaces with cozy, colorful seating and versatile, collaborative work areas for casual meetings can make all the difference when it comes to attracting younger employees.

Millennials today are...

32% OF THE
LABOR
MARKET

50% OF THE
GLOBAL MARKET
BY 2020

78% MORE TECH
SAVVY THAN
GEN XERS AND BOOMERS

Within five years, Millennials will outnumber Baby Boomers in the workplace making them a key employee demographic for many modern companies*.

*Designing for Millennials: Redefining Work and the Workplace, HNI Millennials Research by Studio Flynn, Feb. 2017.

TRENDS 2018:

Balancing Me & We Spaces

Although the concept of an open office has been around for a while, it's gaining popularity as today's companies and their workspaces progress. The characteristics of an open office usually include minimal interior walls, a benching system, fewer private offices, more meeting or huddle rooms and a variety of designated multi-purpose lounge or common areas*.

So what brought on this trend? Several factors—for one, advances in technology mean that everything is smaller and sleeker, allowing for a clean, modern and streamlined office space.

As cities and businesses continue to grow, the cost of rent increases while, the amount of available square footage decreases—which means maximizing a smaller space is a must to offset the cost of real estate**.

Millennial workers are helping to shape offices of the future with open layouts and tech-friendly designs, but they still share those workspaces with Gen X or Baby Boomer employees who may not be ready or able to retire<sup>***</sup>. Considering the differences between younger and older generational groups, it's not surprising that they want different things when it comes to workspaces. Several studies indicate that Millennials lean towards comfort and open, collaborative spaces, while older generations prefer the privacy of the traditional office setup*.

To address both work preferences, many modern businesses are incorporating more flexible, modular workspaces, comprised of office ecosystems—functional areas that fit a variety of work styles to enhance overall employee happiness and productivity*.

Companies that effectively balance 'we' and 'me' spaces—focusing on the open, collaborative office spaces preferred by Millennials, as well as the traditional, private workstations favored by older generations—are expected to hold a significant competitive advantage when attempting to attract and retain great employees*.

Other influences that impact workspace designs and attract top talent:

TECH-FRIENDLY SOLUTIONS

PHYSICAL & MENTAL HEALTH

MOBILE LIFESTYLES

Additions like workstations with adjustable desks, ergonomic furniture and multi-purpose or convertible workspaces are highly coveted by business owners and employees alike*. Office environments that are flexible, comfortable and allow for freedom of choice are more likely to entice employees to work there and stay with those companies long term.

Wellness @ Work

It seems like everyone is trying to be healthier these days—and that means businesses should be too. Increasing awareness of physical and mental workplace well-being and its affect on employee happiness and productivity has led to many improvements in the ways that companies plan their workspaces and office culture.

HUMAN-CENTERED DESIGN

Ergonomic office seating is engineered to work with the human body to provide comfortable support and healthy posture. Height- and width-adjustable arms, cushioned seat and lumbar support are all important features to look for when choosing a chair*. Other active office furniture solutions like sit-to-stand desks and perch stools allow employees to change their positions throughout the day*.

TAKE A BREAK

Encouraging break time is exceedingly important for productive well-being. Human brains aren't built for long periods of extended focus, so the act of 'taking a break' allows workers to mentally and physically recharge and come back ready to conquer the rest of the workday***.

CHANGE OF SPACE

Providing employees with alternative places to work also encourages them to be more active and move away from their desks for portions of the day so that they can concentrate, collaborate and recharge*. Cozy, multi-purpose common areas that encourage teamwork are perfect for impromptu meetings and brainstorm sessions, whereas private spaces, like quiet nooks and huddle rooms are ideal for personal breaks, concentration and focused tasks*.

MOTHER NATURE

The influence of nature is a key element in workplace well-being. Studies show that more interaction with nature decreases stress and enhances emotional well-being. In fact, an 18-month project from Exeter University demonstrated that adding potted plants to an office environment increased well-being by 47%, creativity by 45%, and productivity by 38%**.

PERK UP

In addition to standard benefits, many of today's organizations offer additional wellness perks, such as office gyms or supplemented gym memberships, work from home policies, access to healthy snacks and drinks, classes and planned social events to help promote better work/life balance and employee happiness.

CERES®

Design built around function. The Ceres collection was engineered based on motion research about how people sit. The result? A kinesthetic seating solution that solves the problem of inconsistent support by keeping the backrest in constant contact with your lumbar as you sit upright, recline, or move between postures. Plus, with a sleek, modern design and built-in, easy-to-use comfort controls, Ceres is sure to make both your workspace and your employees happy.

Proudly Made in the USA

The HON Company is committed to a U.S. operating model that is rare in today's commercial furniture business. Making significant investments in new state-of-the-art manufacturing and fulfillment centers, HON remains focused on manufacturing most of its products in the USA – everything from individual components to complete furniture solutions.

On the level®

level, a Business Institutional Furniture Manufacturers Association (BIFMA) sustainability standard, was developed in response to the increasing demand for proof that manufacturers are living up to their environmental claims. The level certification is a multi-attribute certification label for products that have met environmental, social and quality standards.

SCS Global Services Indoor Advantage™

SCS Global Services Indoor Advantage subjects products to specific indoor air quality standards to improve the air quality within enclosed indoor environments. Indoor Advantage certification adheres to Business Institutional Furniture Manufacturers Association (BIFMA) testing standards.
